PROGRAM 25c

HENRY W. KIEL AUDITORIUM

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

To Our School Patrons . . .

This basketball tournament is under the supervision of the Missouri State High School Activities Association. Because of the fact that few people have an opportunity to learn of the nature and function of this organization, the following information is provided to enhance your understanding. The MSHSAA is a voluntary, nonprofit educational organization through which its member schools work cooperatively. Approximately 830 junior and senior high schools, in which over 393,000 students are enrolled, hold membership. The standards contained in its Constitution and By-Laws to guide interschool activities have been adopted by a vote of its member schools. The schools elect a Board of Control consisting of one representative from each of the Association's eight districts. This body is charged with the responsibility of enforcing the rules and administering the program of the Association. However, it has neither the authority to set a standard nor to waive a standard that has been adopted by a vote of the member schools. The Association is charged with the responsibility of supervising interschool activities in the area of athletics, music, and speech.

A Philosophy of Interscholastic Athletics . . .

The MSHSAA operates in accord with the philosophy that interscholastic athletics shall be an integral part of the total secondary educational program and should provide wholesome experiences to players, students, and fans that will result in learning outcomes which will contribute to the development of the attributes of good citizenship. To this end only can secondary school athletics be justified.

Purpose of District and State Events . . .

District and state athletic contests have several purposes, but there are two primary purposes that justify and cause district and state meets to be desired. They are (1) to provide opportunities to demonstrate before the public the best knowledge, skills, and emotional patterns taught through a particular sport, and (2) to evaluate the best that is taught in a school system in comparison with the best taught in other schools. Unless these purposes are primary, district and state athletics cannot be completely justified.

This basketball tournament will demonstrate and evaluate the skills, knowledge, and sportsmanship taught by the participating schools in their basketball programs and will be illustrative of the best taught in the state.

You are an important part of the environment of this tournament. The sportsmanship of our boys and girls will be influenced by the type of sportsmanship that you display. We trust that it will be of the type that will contribute to the educational values of this event. Without your cooperation we cannot achieve our most worthwhile objectives.

INTERSCHOLASTIC ATHLETICS

Although we have highly-organized interschool competition today, many people do not have any knowledge of the history of interscholastic athletics. Few realize that athletic activities were first brought into the schools by the students themselves, primarily for one reason. That reason was "fun."

In the beginning, these activities were frowned upon by school administrators who saw little value in students just having "fun." However, they began to grow and some problems and abuses began to result as keener competition developed. The schools found themselves facing a decision. Either these athletic contests had to be discontinued or some control had to be exercised over them. The result was collective action on the part of the schools culminating in state athletic associations and a National Federation of State High School Athletic Associations.

With the setting of standards by collective action of the schools, some educational values began to be observed. It has been the evolution of standards that has made the difference. There are standards of eligibility that must be met by the student to enjoy the privilege of representing his school in interscholastic competition. The schools themselves have standards that must be met before they can engage in competition with other high schools. Today, well-planned, well-administered, and well-supervised interscholastic athletics are considered as having definite educational values. Many of the attributes of good citizenship can be taught by these activities providing students experiences in which they learn to uphold ideals of good sportsmanship, conform to rules, and respect authority. The sportsmanship and conduct of students at athletic events the past several years has shown great improvement.

All school athletic fans better appreciate the interscholastic program when they understand the difference between it and other types of athletics. It differs from professional athletics in that the latter is a business enterprise in which owners expect to make a profit and players are playing as a means of earning a livelihood. It is an honest, worthwhile program but differs much from the school athletic program which operates under a philosophy that the athletic experiences are primarily for educational purposes. Standards are set to assure that these important educational outcomes are attained. School athletics are amateur, but differ in purpose considerably from other amateur athletics. Most amateur athletics have as their primary purpose to provide recreation for the participants and spectators. These are secondary in a school athletic program. The differences might be summarized by stating that, although school athletics are amateur, not all amateur athletics are synonymous in purpose with school athletics.

All those who have any responsibility in administering secondary school interscholastic athletic programs should make every attempt to make certain that students, players, and fans understand the difference in the types of athletic programs and the philosophies under which they operate. They must realize that the standards upheld by the schools are essential to implement the schools' philosophy of interscholastics in the best educational interests of boys and girls. The players, coaches, officials, school administrators, and fans all have a part in helping the interscholastic program provide significant educational experiences to youth. Unless it contributes to the educational objectives of the schools, it cannot be justified as a part of the total secondary education program.
